WHEREAS: Residents are most in touch with the needs of their respective neighborhoods and are instrumental in implementing lasting positive change in the community; and

WHEREAS: Residents may recognize a need for advocacy, but may find it difficult to vocalize their proposals to the various boards and agencies of the city, since those most affected may not necessarily have prior experience with the inner-workings of our municipal government; and

WHEREAS: Repeated variance requests for relief from Cambridge zoning restrictions for signage, setbacks, parking and more indicate that there is a disconnect between what the City's current zoning allows and what some property owners want to do; and

WHEREAS: Variances are only to be granted in narrow circumstances; and

WHEREAS: Repeated requests for variances, many of which are granted, creates a general concern that the City's zoning code is not working properly, especially if many variances are granted; and

WHEREAS: Trends in both variance applications and variance approval would give City planners and the City Council information on what changes might be considered in the zoning code or what communications might be sent to the Board of Zoning Appeals, and, if appropriate, the Planning Board, on the importance of narrowly construing relief of a zoning code the Council has affirmatively adopted; now be it therefore
