TEXT OF ORDERS

O-1 Apr 7, 2008

COUNCILLOR KELLEY

COUNCILLOR DAVIS

WHEREAS: Seniors and people with disabilities need uniquely attentive taxi service to keep them from becoming housebound, especially during inclement weather; and

WHEREAS: This unique attention may include knocking on a door and assisting someone downstairs and into a cab or folding up and unfolding a wheelchair; and

WHEREAS: There have recently been concerns about taxi drivers not providing the necessary attention to the needs of seniors and people with disabilities, with the result that these people may miss their taxi rides or not be able to get cabs at all; now therefore be it

ORDERED: That the City Manager be and hereby is requested to report back to the City Council on the obligations of taxi drivers, to include those driving the special accessible taxis, to meet the unique needs of seniors and people with disabilities.

MAYOR SIMMONS

VICE MAYOR MURPHY

COUNCILLOR MAHER

WHEREAS: David Halberstam was a resident of Cambridge while a student at Harvard College from 1951 to 1955; and

WHEREAS: David Halberstam's extracurricular life at Harvard centered on The Harvard Crimson, where he served as a news writer, sports writer, and managing editor; and

WHEREAS: Immediately following his graduation in 1955, David Halberstam set out for his first job as a reporter for the Daily Times Leader in West Point, Mississippi, because, as he later told Ray Suarez on National Public Radio, he wanted to start his career at the heart of "state-sanctioned injustice, state-sanctioned racism" in America; and

WHEREAS: David Halberstam did not last in that first job. He wrote an article about a local political leader who said to a gathering of Mississippi Democrats, "If any _____ try to come in, bring them around back and we'll take care of them," and when his editor suggested that David point out that perhaps the man was only trying to be helpful, David said he didn't think that was true. Veritas was important to David; and

WHEREAS: He continued to report on the Civil Rights movement, first for the Tennessean in Nashville, then for the New York Times. the work in Nashville later served as the basis in 1998 for The Children, considered by many his finest book - the story of young blacks who decided to work against the idea of white-only water fountains and rest rooms. David considered it a privilege to be so close to this "luminescent moment" of American democracy; and

WHEREAS: Having won the Pulitzer Prize for his reporting from the field on the Vietnam War in 1974, David Halberstam embarked on a second career theme - telling truth to power. His most famous book, The Best and the Brightest, tells how President John F. Kennedy assembled talented and educated men for his administration, selecting from America's power elite those who would develop a failing strategy, leading to a tragic loss of life and humiliating defeat. He used what Russell Baker calls, "the new journalism," employing fictional techniques to make complex matters understandable, "remaining faithful to the facts without constant explanations of how the facts were obtained;" and

WHEREAS: Though not a scholar, David Halberstam liked to say that "As a journalist, I was a good historian, and as a historian, I was a good journalist." He helped to remake America's perception of itself. He also loved sports and wrote about Michael Jordan, Ted Williams, Bill Belichick, and many others - always looking to find the source of each person's ability to achieve at a high level. Boston's sportswriters consider him to have been a master of their craft; and

WHEREAS: In his last book, The Coldest Winter, about the Korean War, David Halberstam documents how the American military, seemingly indifferent to any understanding of its enemies, their cultures, and their methods of warfare, actually doctored intelligence to mislead America, drawing clear parallels to the current administration and to its rationale for the Iraq war. David Halberstam was killed in an automobile accident on Apr 23, 2007, just as this book was going to press; and

WHEREAS: While there has from time to time been conflict between Harvard College as an institution and Cambridge residents, Cambridge has always taken great pride in the achievements of Harvard students and alumni; and

WHEREAS: David Halberstam's journalistic accomplishments exemplify and have contributed to Cambridge citizens' commitment to racial justice and equity and its opposition to unjust wars; and

WHEREAS: In recognizing David Halberstam, the City of Cambridge wishes to honor one of this generation's foremost citizens for his courage and his patriotism and hopes that it will inspire present and future generations of college students at Harvard and elsewhere to go where their highest ideals take them, to eye official pronouncements from powerful sources with appropriate skepticism, and to tell the truth - VERITAS - in ways that people can understand; and

WHEREAS: The City Council desires to rename Plympton Street, from Massachusetts Avenue to Memorial Drive, as Halberstam Street; now therefore be it

ORDERED: That the City Council hereby refers this matter to the Government Operations and Rules Committee to hold a public hearing to which the property owners, businesses and residents of this portion of Plympton Street are invited, to ensure sufficient notification of this proposed change; and be it further ORDERED: That the Government Operations and Rules Committee report back to the City Council on this matter.
